FOURTEEN MEN CONTESTING SCIENCE UNDERGRADUATE OFFICES NEXT WEDNESDAY

Five positions to be filled——Record number of nominations——Three contesting each office except secretary ship——Increased activities responsible for interest ——elections will be held next Wednesday.

Nominations for the five offices on the Science Undergraduate executive closed yesterday afternoon and when the nomination sheets were sorted out it was found that there were fourteen men running for the positions. There will be contests in every case, three men being nominated for president, three for vice-president, three for secretary, three for treasurer, and two for assistant secretary. This is a record number of nominees for the Science Undergraduate Society, the unprecedented interest in the elections, being due no doubt to the increased activities of the Society particularly the staging of the Science Dance, now famous as "The Plumbers' Ball."

The men nominated are Lloyd B. Almond, Willard H. Kyle, and Forrest Rutherford, from third year, for president.

"Bobby" Burland, "Bill" Heeney and "Little" Moore, also from third year for vice-president.

George Dufresne, Jack Racey and Ronald Weir from Sc. '27 for secretary.

Bob Beck, Charlie Coleman and Arnold ("Hooley") Smith, for treasurer, while Wally Jehu and Sheldon Coleman have been nominated from first year for assistant secretary.

Elections will be held next Wednesday from 9 till 5 and a record vote is expected. Every Science student is urged to use his franchise as it is desired to get conclusive opinion in all offices.

Nominations are as follows.—

For President:

We, the following, hereby nominate Loyd B. Almond for president of the Science Undergraduate Society.

G. Merritt.
M. H. Dineen,
Walter Jehu.
H. B. Norris,
Jack R. Frith
Richard E. Barrett
W. H. Kyle,
E. S. Cope.
S. A. Craig.
George L. Dufresne.

We, the undersigned, hereby nominate W. H. Kyle for president of the Science Undergraduate Society.

Clem M. Anson
George E. Vernot,
Howard D. Hyman.
R. M. P. Hamilton.
H. P. Petzold.
W. A. T. Gilmour.
J. G. Wright.
Arnold W. Smith.
R. Wayland.
George L. Vickerson.

And Yet They Say That McGill Has No Religion

(By J. W. Jeakins)

It was a dull season in the Registrar's Office. Examination were in sight so there were few undergraduates coming in to disturb the peace of the place. It is true that I had just answered a telephone enquiry as to whether the University Extension Department had any course in Fancy Work this year, and another enquiry from one with nasal twang, who came to the counter and announced that he was a graduate of the Motor Barber College of Barber College, Pa., and wished to get credit for higher standing in Faculty of Medicine. But, as I say, comparatively speaking, the office was quiet. I was dozing peacefully in my chair, my thoughts drifting idly in pleasant channels when a chance remark that I had overheard on a street car came back to me with a jarring effect and my day dreaming was at an end. The remark I had overheard was to the effect that McGill was an irreligious institution. The more I thought of this the more perturbed I became. I decided to investigate and if possible discover for myself to what extent the accusation was true. With facts before me something might be done. It was not yet too late to divert some of the subscriptions for students of Central Europe to a fund for sending a missionary or even two missionaries to the Godless children of McGill.

I got out the Record Cards and after hours of labour the conclusion was gradually forced upon me that the suspicion of irreligion, prevalent though it may be, is false and comes from those who know not whereof they speak. In fact the more I searched amongst the records the more it was impressed on me that far from being irreligious, McGill au contraire was full of religion. I had unearthed more religions than the University has Faculties and Departments; to be exact—twenty. Amongst the 2451 students at McGill (this does not include the Faculty of Music or Macdonald College) I had found twenty different denominations, sects or creeds. It is true that one bold boy had frankly announced himself as an Agnostic, and sixty-nine naughty people confessed that they had no religion. Of the latter I have a shrewd suspicion that some, at any rate, would be like the lad who, told me he had no religion, but when suggested that he couldn't be sincere in his wickedness he said, "Oh well, put me down as a Methodist".

Of the twenty religions, I found that the Hebrews, 539 strong, were the most numerous. But then they have always had Church Union. Next came Anglicans and Presbyterians who ran a dead heat and finished with 499 each. Amongst the Presbyterians I have numbered the good and bad, as my information was received before the Union movement. There are 282 Roman Catholic and 263 Methodists. 161 could not be classed as they had put themselves as Protestants. I expect these are those careful souls who realize that by being nondescript they will probably avoid being embarrassed by a visit from the parish worker or from those who canvass for subscriptions. There are 51 Baptists, 37 Congregationalists, 14 Unitarians, 4 Greek Orthodox, 3 Lutherans, 3 Christian Scientists and two Plymouth Brethren. The two Moravians puzzled me for some time until I opened my dictionary and discovered that they are a protestant sect holding Hussite doctrines, founded in Saxony by Moravian emigrants. There are two Free Thinkers, but judging from correspondence in the "Daily" and articles in the Literary Supplement one is lead to believe that there are some of this sect who have not admitted it. I was absolutely stumped by the one A. M. E. Calling on the office boy for assistance he informed me that it meant American Methodist Episcopal. It seems a lot. Other lonely bodies are the one Universalist, one Church of New Jerusalem, one follower of Islam and, lastly, as is fitting, one Latter Day Saint.

Now that I have completed my summary I begin to wonder whether I was not over hasty in drawing my conclusion. Perhaps after all the man in the street car was right. McGill has no religion, she has them all.

McCORD MUSEUM ANNOUNCES GIFTS

Rare Coins and Documents of Historian Value Added to Collections

The announcement of further gifts to the David Ross McCord Natural Museum was made at the general meeting of the Museum Commitee held on Wednesday.

This include rare historic coins and medals and some documents of great historic interest.

Presented by Dr. Francis McLennan they included a Charles II. coronation medal in silver, date 1661; a James II. shilling, gun money; a George II. and Queen Caroline medal, 1736; a Prince Albert medal, commemorating the laying of the foundation stone by Prince Albert, Consort of Queen Victoria, of the Sailors' Home, Liverpool, in 1846, a bronze medal commemorating the visit to Ireland in 1868 of Edward VII then Prince of Wales and his installation as Knight of the Order of St. Patrick; another medal of the Prince struck in 1873, commemorating the annual international exhibition of all fine arts, industries, and inventions; a Lord Nelson medal commemorating his victorious return to England on November 5, 1800; and a Major-General Sir William Carrol Knight bronze medal.

Dr. W. D. Lighthall presented a framed document—an agreement whereby Jean Baptiste Testard de Montigny, Knight of St. Louis, and Col. Schuyler, of Albany, New York appointed certain merchants arbitrators in respect to the ransom of Bonavista. The agreement was witnessed and dated at Ville Marie, August 31, 1715. Miss A. McCord presented volumes one and two of the correspondence of Lieut. Governor John G. Simcoe, with allied document relating to upper Canada. Collected and edited by Brig.-Gen. E. A. Cruikshank for the Ontario Historical Society; and Z. Massicotte donated a brochure on "The Ceinture-Fleche," an illustrated paper read before the Royal Society of Canada. Other gifts were a Jubilee Coronation number of the London Sunday Sun, July 10, 1838, containing a full description of the procession and coronation of Queen Victoria, presented by Mrs. O. Rolland; and a set of eight unusual photographs of Caughnawaga showing the rear of the church, the river and part of the old Fort St. Louis, presented by W. D. Lighthall.

The Museum Committee decided to place the tablet marking the site of the Village of Hochelaga in the eastern part of McGill grounds. This tablet is one of the series which is being placed by the Government to mark historic sites.

LIFESAVING CLASS AT K. OF C. TANK

Mondays, Wednesdays and Fridays From 5.30 to 6.30 p.m.

Now that the senior polo and swimming schedule is finished, Mr. Vernot is intending to make a class for life saving. As Clayton Bourne and C. S. Kuine have passed their tests, he is going to use them in training any of those who are interested and hopes to get the beginners advanced enough that they can get their bronze medallions by the beginning of April.

Mr. Vernot will be at tank from 5.30 p.m. to 6.30 p.m. on Mondays Wednesdays and Fridays and attendance will be given on these days and also to those learning to swim on Tuesdays. Mr. Vernot will keep the polo teams busy so as to keep them in condition as much as possible and any new material that comes to light will be used for either the junior or intermediate series in the City League next fall'

He will also train the swimmers and any of those who are interested are sure to be well looked after. Cooper, MacLaren and others who turned out for the diving are expected to turn out as Mr. Vernot has more time to look after them.

OPTIMISTIC NOTE SOUNDED BY PRINCIPAL

Speech Yesterday to Toronto Empire Club

RECALLED WAR

Talk of National Bankruptcy, Seccession and Decay traitorous to Dead

Toronto Mar. 29.—"Of the troubled period ten years ago, it is needless to speak here. No whisper of death was heard at home or along the battle line. The men of the Canadian Corps may have been criticized for many things by more orthodox and conventional soldiers, but they were never accused of lack of courage. They bowed to no master upon the earth; and to their blithe young hearts death itself had no terrors, for they knew their quarrel to be just. Who can forget the pride in our country and in our Canadian badge?

"Surely we will not allow the emotions of these years to be transient; surely they will not be allowed to pass away while we talk flippantly of National bankruptcy and secession and decay.

"If we do not use our best endeavors as individuals and as organizations to stop such talk and to overcome such fear, our fathers have struggled in vain, our soldiers have died in vain and we are traitors to their ideals and to their memory."

"I am not going to speak of war. I am going to speak of peace. I am not going to speak to Europe, but of Canada. And the irony of my remarks is this—that it should be necessary to plead for the conquest of fear in days of quiet, when it was never necessary to plead for courage during the days of the world unrest.".

The foregoing remarks were by Sir Arthur Currie, in introducing his address on "The Conquest of National Fear," at the Empire Club luncheon yesterday. It was not as a soldier, but as Principal of McGill University, that he spoke, and he quickly disclaimed any intention of seeking to "give advice, which may be too generously bestowed where it is least needed or desired."

"The giving of evidence is a common human failing."

"There exists in some quarters of Canada today a definite fear with regard to the present state of the country, and with regard to our future destiny," said Sir Arthur. "The fire of unrest was lighted soon after the war; and instead of trying to extinguish it there are many among us who are today trying to add fuel to its flame. Like every other country on the globe, Canada has difficulties and dangers within her boundaries. Her problems are internal—problems of debt, of taxation, of cost of living, of unemployment, of railways, of labor, of provincial jealousy and misunderstanding and of exorbitant and unjust sectional demands. If they did not exist our country would be the only Utopia on the globe.

"The wail of our Jeremiahs over these problems is echoed from ocean to ocean. Luxury is rampant, they tell us. Extravagance is unprecedented. There is no thrift, no high seriousness. Nero-like we fiddle while the Rome of our hopes is burning. Only a sure and empty bankruptcy awaits us, and to that doom we are slowly drifting. But before that hour of our doom is struck, the Maritime Provinces will secede to independence; the Prairie Provinces will pass to the United States.

"It is very much the fashion, particularly of those who pique themselves on their patriotism, to decry their own country. They are never tired of announcing that we are an enervated race, that Canada is played out'.

"In my judgement, there is no ground for this spirit of violent self-depreciation. We are not as a country overtaken by the decay which is advertised with trumpet blast throughout the land. A spirit of modesty and effort is doubtless necessary and desirable, but this raucous self-abuse confined to no one political party, can only lead in the end to a realization of their terror.

Even if our condition is as terrifying as the pessimists would have us believe, we can look the facts in the eye and meet their face with courage.

"The gravity of our situation today is no greater than our ancestors often passed through and we of this generation passed through. To succumb to our fear is to be false to our fathers and to forget the glorious pages of our history.

"Where among all the heroic sagas of our school days is there a story that can equal in its grandeur and its vision the drama of the Canadian forest, in which the French and Scottish explorers played the leading role They are our first national examples of our conquest of fear.

"Think again of the early Scottish immigrants to the Maritime Provinces and to Ontario, the ancestors of many of us around this board. They fled from religious hostilities or restrictions from harrassing political, economic or social condition. They took the serious risk of attempting to secure a foothold in the fresh and free Canada. Their attitude was emulated by the first pioneers to our great West."

FINAL MEETING OF NEWFOUNDLANDERS

To Close Session With Banquet at Edinburgh Cafe

The final meeting of the McGill Newfoundland Club for this College session will be held on Thursday evening, March 26th, when it will take the form of a banquet at the Edinburgh Cafe,' and is scheduled to start at 7.30

Owing to the multiplicity of social events at McGill, it has been the policy of the Club to reduce the programme to two main meetings—the first one being held at the beginning of the college year, and the second one is the closing banquet to be held next week.

At the initial meeting, a chance is given for all new members to be welcomed into the club, and to meet their fellow-countrymen here, while the final meeting assumes more of the form of a farewell party to the graduating members and a last "get -together" of the remainder before dispersing for the summer.

At the forthcoming banquet there will be present several notable men as guests, both from the University and from the City, and it is hoped that the appreciation of the members of the club will be shown to these men by a large attendance.

After the banquet, a meeting will be held to elect the officers of the Club for the ensuing year, in which it is expected that a great interest will be taken, as it is on the men elected to carry on the duties of the Club in the future that the success of the Club will depend.

Any of the members of the Club Executive will be pleased to give any further information available to those who are interested, and it will greatly facilitate the arrangements being made if those who intend going will communicate as soon as possible with one of the executive.

The time for the banquet is set for 7.30 p.m. and everyone will very materially aid in the evening's success by being there on time, so that an early start may be made, and those present may be assured of a very pleasant and profitable evening's entertainment.

BEST YET IS GENERAL VERDICT ON RED-AND-WHITE REVUE OF 1925 WHEN GREAT HIT WAS ACHIEVED

Edythe Ziff wins honours as premiere danseuse——Snappy work of choruses—— Lovell Mickles gives clever female impersonation——Singing of Frances James and Yolande Forand outstanding——Evan Gill featured as comedian——staging and jazz revue contribute to success of show —— Full House —— Perfect Discipline.

The 1925 edition of the Red-and-White Revue opened to a packed house at His Majesty's Theatre last night, and from eight thirty to the fall of the final curtain kept the audience in roars.

Particularly outstanding was the work of the choruses both that of the "small chorus" seen at its best in the "College Vamp" number, and of the pirates in the "Sea Hack". These girls certainly can dance. They show the influence of painstaking preparation and thorough training and they are not, as has been the case in past years, afraid to kick. Their costumes are revealing in many ways, not the least of the things which they reveal being the skill of their designer, Gordie Hughes.

LOVELL MICKLES

Scored Hit at Revue Last Night

Edythe Ziff as premiere danseuse contributes perhaps the finest piece of individual work in the whole production. Her dancing is a joy to watch, and can challenge comparison in any way with that of professionals. The Arab Dance in the second scene of the Sea Hack being a particularly noteworthy achievement while she carried her audience away to score a personal triumph in the College Vamp song. This, by the way is one of Willard Crocker's most timeful dance numbers and combined with an exceptionally clever lyric should achieve a widespread popularity about the campus. Harold White who sings this song, and takes the lead in several others, has a pleasing voice and the right kind of personality to get across the footlights to the good graces of his audience.

The best singing of the evening however is that of Frances James and Yolande Forand. Miss James' singing of "The Secret of Your Eyes" won sustained and well deserved applause while her duet, "The Aloe Flower" with Lawrence Lande was one of the outstanding successes of the Sea Hack. Miss Forand was equally good in her rendering of "No Other Eyes".

The music of these songs and of the Nautch dances is by Croker and Davis and is among the best that has been done yet. The score is certainly one of the strong features of the production and the act entitled "A Musical Complex" is one of the best. It opened with a pianologue by Rusty Davis, continued with Cliff Menzies and his Collegians, and on through a eukalele specialty by a male chorus, to a snappy dancing number by Edna and Yvonne Stearns and Clinton Steuerwald. The last was one of the bright spots and won long and well deserved applause. But it was excelled by the final number of this act—Lovell Mickles as a Vamp in one of Crocker's best songs "My Shape is Funny". It brought down the house.

Eddie Hanna and Jack Cameron took part in an astounding mental telepathy act that for sheer mystery has rarely been excelled in this city. Hanna is a psychological wonder and his clever feats of mind reading amazed those to whom this was a new side of his character. Some of the later portions of their dialogue might be cut will advantage as it is rather long drawn out.

Much of the comedy rests upon the capable shoulders of Evan Gill. Gill is of the very serious silly ass type of comedians eminently suited for the parts assigned him. As Biffin (junior) the substitute stage manager who very nearly ruins a tense and mellow drama he was at his best.

The settings, especially in the Sea Hack were very good, and the costumes all through the play were excellent. Those responsible for these departments deserve great credit, as do Willard Crocker, musical director and Sydney Pierce, producer.

In the show as a whole with the exception of Miss James' and Miss Forand's songs, and of the Sea Hack music and Nautch Dance it seems to us as though there has been at times too conscious attempt to keep humour down to the low intellectual level of an audience of morons, and wit butchered to make a college holiday. Lovell Mickle's "My Shape is Funny" song, and all the songs in which the choruses appeared were the best things in any McGill show yet.

SECOND YEAR WINS PRIZE AT SOCIETE

Mrs. Garside and Mlle Fromery Were the Judges

CLEVER ACTING

Final Meeting Will Be In Conjunction With the Cercle Francais

The Second Year students were the winners of the prize for the best play at the meeting of the Societe Francaise yesterday at the R. V. C.

The Sophomore girls presented a story dealing with the love affair of the fiery Berthe (Miss Isabel Hasley) Her father (Miss B. Lyman) wishes her to marry Mr. Foville (Miss G. Barre) who strenously objected. Berthe, at a ball, slaps the face of a Viscount, (Miss M. MacSparrow) because he cannot tox-trot properly. The latter falls madly in love with her, and on being refused threatens to jump out of the window. Berthe promises to marry him—Very humorous situations ensue until the happy couple solve the problem by eloping.

All the actors spoke excellent French and showed great ability in their various roles. Miss MacSparrow however deserves special mention. As the Viscount she kept the audience in fits of laughter every minute she was on the stage.

The First Year gave a scene from "Le Voyage de M. Perichon". This popular play was much appreciated by the audience, especially those taking first year French. Miss Adile Languedoc took the part of M. Perichon and did it very well. "Miss R. Gordner filled the role of Madame Perichon. Miss E. Brooks as Armond, and Miss C. Murray as Henriette.

The third year's choice was a parody on that ever popular play "Britannicus." Miss G. Hart took the part of the cruel Nero, who prinsons the woman he loves because she gives her affection to Britannicus. He offers the poisoned ginger-ale with straws and as they are dying he strums the banjo. His wife stabs Nero and finally a guard stabs her. Miss Kayser took the part of the Empress. Miss Douglas, was Britannicus. Others were Miss Levikoff, Miss Ransome, Miss Gilman and Miss Parker.

Mrs. Garside and Mlle Framery acted as judges and presented the prize to the sophomores.

PETTY THIEVERY

The Students' Council invested 300 dollars in silverware for the Union at the beginning of the present session. It was reported at the Students' Society meeting that half of this silverware had disappeared in the course of a few months. There is only one conclusion to be drawn from this statement of fact, that a number of students are far from being morally sound, that they will stoop to the unlawful and despicable methods practised by minions of the underworld in order to procure what is the inalienable property of the student body. We have repeatedly directed tirades against the practice of thievery which appears to be increasing among undergraduates—but the practice continues. In fact if an appeal to a student's sense of honour does not tend to reform his ways, there is no efficient method of forcing him to reform since it is almost impossible to lay hands on the thief who subtly sticks knives, forks and spoons in his pockets and walks off with them. Members of the various clubs about the campus have been known to replenish their stock of silverware by "taking" articles from the city hotels. It may be that the Union is the victim of the same enthusiasts. The mere fact that property belongs to an organization instead of an individual by no means justifies unlawful pilfering of that property, and the act of pilferage is no less heinous when it is committed by a supposedly intellectual person instead of by a member of the underworld.

We again appeal to the sense of honour among students who have been guilty of petty thievery, if they have a sense of honour, to desist from acts that are detrimental to the welfare of students as a whole. Incidentally it would be an excellent idea to return some of the Union's silverware by the same surreptitious means employed in carrying it away.

HELLWULF SON OF MUDGAR

A Tale of the Vikings.

By Umpfb.

Far up in the northland there siands a rock. It is fifty miles high and a thousand miles broad, but that has nothing at all to do with the story so it might just as well be left out.

Bards have oft heraided in poem and story the wild, mad tale of Gotheald, chiefest of all the pirate breed that infested the Great Northern Sea with their long oared craft, sweeping from the Fords and Reos of their native fastnesses to prey upon any hapless merchant who dared to brave the fierce blasts of Boreas. They tell of how came a time when Gotheald waxed great in wealth; in mighty stores of gold and armour; in beer and ale and foaming mead; in hogs and wives and children. How his greatest glory was his daughter Freytgar, fairest of all maidens fair; on whom no jarl, or thane, or thrall, or serf, or knave might look without falling beneath the spell of her beauty and her old man's jack.

Now it came to pass that one dark northern night when all the warriors of Jarl Gotheald's household were assembled in the beer halls, drunk with glory and foaming mead as they trolled forth their drunken, brawling, dirty songs, gleaned from the shores of the Franks and sunny Hispanola; a thrall mad with fear, burst into the halls. Straight to the dais of the good Jarl who sat in gay and inebriated silence, went he and poured forth a tale of fire and smoke upon the northern marches. How a dragon, come from the icy, wind blown steppes, was despoiling the country as far as Wrottgar. How the dragon slew a man with a blast of his fiery breath and munched him slowly with bits of grass and fodder. How he had depopulated the country for many miles; that he had scales made by the C.P.R. which no weapon could pierce.

Jarl Gotheald muttered a sonorous, maudlin curse in his heavy beard; his great wavy beard, derorated with golden threads and yesterday's soup, curled up with rage. "By Odin here is a tale for heroes. The thane that slays said dragon shall have my daughter's hand in marriage and a flat car full of rubles beside." And at these words the warriors leaped to their feet with a mighty shout that woke up the sots slumbering beneath the great tables. All tore their weapons off the wall and tore out of the door. None of them ever come back. Perhaps the dragon, several sizes too large, could tell a tale of an excellent repast, had he cared.

Fretgar sat in one of her windows in her od man's ramshackle sty, which the natives graced by the name of palace. She too, was sad. No more did love sick swains moon dreamy things at her number twelves. All lay dead in the maw of the frightful monster. Great Jarls had come from Norway and Sweden, and long-haired Normans from Newport and Covington and Goths from over the Rhine, lured by the promise of the fair Freytgar in marriage and the promise of her father's gold. All had died beneath the eternal flames from the gullet of the monster.

To the north and east and west one could see nothing but wasteland and burned cottages and ruined villages. The roar of the dragon, who had a desperate craving for more food, came in mellifluous sighs across the valley. Nothing moved upon the great Northern Sea. All was silent there. But was there naught but silence? No, by heaven! Across the waters there comes a small bark. It s followed by a bight (in the cord dragging behind). In the bark there sits a man. He is small and lean. Now and then there is a flash of a drinkng horn as he tips it bottom up. The man appears to be thinking. The bark speeds over the waters. It grounds upon the shore. The young man leaps out and begins the arduous climb up the cliff to her father's halls.

He reaches the top, which for a man in his condition, is nothing short of miraculous. He approaches the door and walks in. She flies down the steps to see who the hardy stranger is. She sees her father look at him with weary, bleary eyes. "Washa wan'?" says Gotheald.

"L'sten bo," replied the stranger leaning familiarly on the old man's head. "My name's Hellwulluf, son of Mudgar from Enri Fyord. I'm gonna crank dis incerator bold and marry your little gal."

"Marrish?" queried Gotheald who was pretty stupid with drink. "Oh, yesh. Oh yesh, yesh, yesh, yesh, yesh—" Hellwulluf picked up a bucket of ice water and deftly slung the contents over Gotheald's bald dome. Gotheald came to with a start. "What and the he—ll was the idear of that, young fella?" he asked dismally. "Washna wan'?" Hellwulluf told him again very patiently. He punctuated his words by jabbing Gotheald neatly in the paunch.

"Well demmit," said Gotheald, "If you wanna, go ahead. Risk your dam-fool neck if you wanna. Freytgar, marry this critter if he comes

BASEBALL GAME GOES TO McGILL

Beat Macdonald in Opening Game of Series

McGill "Reds" won the opening game of the City and District indoor basketball league last night against the Macdonald nine. McGill took the lead from the beginning, and steadily increased it until the final score stood at 20-7. More accurate playing was mainly responsible for the win, the Macdonald squad not showing quite the same amount of, necessary winning 'pep"

The McGill men played a very consistent game, throughout, each man regularly bringing in the runs. Milne played a strong game in pitcher's box, McGill having the advantage in this respect, for the losers the Cook brothers and Walker brought in the majority of runs.

The next game in this league is being played next Saturday afternoon at Macdonald college, between the McGill "Whites", and Macdonald.

Mosquitoes

Harry's Latest Hit —To the tune of "Oh Canada"

In Canada
How the mosquitoes do bite.
To draw my poor blood
Seems t obe their delight.
I'm having my dinner, the insects have their's too.
Believe me when I say,
That my skin instead of being white
Is swollen black and blue.

Chorus

In Canada
We love the shining skies
But we can't appreciate mosquitoes and the flies

In Canada
How the insects persevere
Doing great research work
In my anatomy dear
Dissecting my hands, my arms my face
And other parts I might say
And though I won't mention any names
I'm full of itching pains to-day

Chorus

In Canada
We love the frost and snows
Better than bites and stings of mosquitoes.

Dear Sir,—We believe that there has been a feeling among the professors in Science that students in first year are not working. Might we then be permitted to ask the following questions.

(a) Why does the work in first year science proceed with such rapidity that many students find it next to impossible to keep abreast of it?

(b) Why do students have to spend two afternoons a week in the carpentry and machine shops, when they have already worked twice the usual time in those shops, and the examinations are only four weeks away?

(d) Why is the standard of the entrance examination low compared with the standard in the first year? It is not fair to the student to allow him easy entrance only to find the work in first year very hard.

Yours truly,

The Editor
McGill Daily

Dear Sir:—In connection with the official statements issued at a recent meeting, that meals are being served below cost, to students at the Union.

May I first express my gratification as an interested student, who eats there daily, in being entrusted with this information this makes for better understanding.

Next may I express my approval in being accorded a meal at such reasonable rates, as in common with many other students, I can ill afford a large outlay for a meal, which as I have said before is an essential and not a luxury.

As a result of policy let us make use of the old adage, "Now is the time for all good men to come to the aid of the Cafeteria, by their patronage, by their suggestions".

Therefore, if you will accept this suggestion, in the spirit which it is given and make use of the saying, "Many heads are better than one", we will discard at least temporarily the older one, "Too many cooks spoil the broth".

To get down to facts; favouring constructive criticism rather than destructive criticism. I took a few hours off and sauntered down to the Restaurant, at our Sister University, (University, of Montreal), and there I procured a meal which in truth I must admit rivals our 40 cent Dinner, and this I obtained for 25 cents. Moreover, I learned that one price prevails at their restaurant, which is in their Students' Building, on Sherbrooke Street. On approaching the manager, I learned that even at the low cost of 25 cents for a Dinner and also the same price for supper, they showed a margin of profit, on asking him if he would give the secret of his success to our cafeteria manager, he said he would be glad to do so, wherefore you will excuse me using so much space in making this known, which I do "to aid our Cafeteria Executive in giving us meals at lower price and not incur a deficit" and to stimulate interest which may bring forth some worthy suggestions.

I feel my troubles are well worth while if we equal the standard set at our Sister University, for students here are equally as poor as students there.

Yours truly,
J. R. CARSON

The Editor,
McGill Daily,

Dear Sir:—Since we have a new executive entering office for the administration of our Union House, I think it is a very opportune time to give what in my opinion will be helpful suggestions.

It was brought to my notice when the report of the Union House was given that our Cafeteria was a source of loss, instead of what should be perhaps a source of small income to the Union, furthermore since a deficit resulted a higher cost for meals would be the result, and this result was brought quite forcibly before us when we reached for our lunch across the Cafeteria counter to-day.

I have the welfare of the Students' activities at heart and this prompted me to enquire into the management of the Cafeteria of our sister University of Montreal.

This is what was brought to my notice as to the menu and cost of the meal which I had at Montreal University today.

The price of the meal was 25 cents (twenty-five cents) it consisted of: Choice of Pea or Vegetable Soups. Meats: choice of any two of the following, Roast of Veal, Blood Pudding Sausages or Pork and Beans

Vegetables: Potatoes and Vegetable Salad.

Desserts. Choice of Honey, Bananas and Cream or Raisin Rice Pudding.

A spotlessly clean tablecloth covered the table on which Pickles and Catsup were set, as much bread and butter as required could be had.

Beverages: Choice of coffee, milk and black or green tea.

You may note, Sir that the above menu is an excellent one and is made much more attractive and appetising when one may get this for the nominal sum of twenty-five cents Futhermore the manager of the Cafeteria was interviewed and this gentleman showed excellent results as to profits derived from his Cafeteria.

I hope that I have not taken up too much space, and that at the same time I may have been a little useful in procuring the above data for our incoming executive.

Very truly yours,
A. C. VOISARD

Message About The Coronation Of King Cook

(Contributed)

Startling information regarding the reason for the worry and prooccupation of the Secretady of State for his August Majesty King Cook has been obtained under cover of darkness and with the assistance of a competent yegg a foreign agent gagged and bound the guards of the Royal Chamber in the New Med. Building and after a two hour search discovered a letter of the greatest political importance hidden behind a framed photograph of the Committee of Sixteen.

This disquieting epistle found in such a unusual place reads as follows:—

To His Excellency The Secretary of State to his most Gracious Majesty King Cook.

Greetings

It is with poignant regret that we are compelled to send you ill tidings but Jappa Keg. Our chief Hula girl, while walking in the Royal Gardens yesterday, fell down the well and kicked the bucket on the way down. This desolating accident has at one fell swoop robbed us of Our favourite entertainer and also of the great pleasure of sending the Word's Shimmy Shaker to entertain that most illustrious and beneficent ruler, your Royal master King Cook on the occasion of his coronation.

Fearing that the ruler of the adjacent island of Kiwani may attempt to outdo our own magnificence now that We can no longer send the famous Tappa Keg, We are at once dispatching Hoop La and Loom Li, her two sisters so that they will be in time for the celebration. These two girls are very young so we have though it best to put them in the charge of their Aunt Lillian Russel during their stay in Montreal. In this way the ministers of your Royal Masters court will be free of the responsibility intendent upon the chaperoning of the young Hula dancers during their stay in the Capital.

I sign myself;
Cockeye Rex.
Chief King of the Awahia Islands

It has been known for some time that all was not going well, with the arrangements for His Majesty's coronation; that there was a hitch somewhere in the preparatons for the Royal Anointment. For several days the various newspapers of the realm have been unsuccessfully endeavoring to obtain an interview with members of the Cabinet of the Privy Council but the latter have refused to make any statements for publication and on one occasion, with brutal cruelty, had a too insistent reporter from this journal thrown to the sharks in the reservor where he perished miserably heartrending possibility that the and by inches. The soul seering and famous Tapped Keg, who it will be remembered, danced before the Prince of Charlotenburg—Frankelstein on his world tour last summer, and who her native admirers with wonderful pictures queeness of the Pacific Islander, have named Gelatine, would not be able to lend the enchantment of her delightful wriggling to the festivities had never entered the minds of the public. True Hoop La and Loom Li are from all reports wonderful dancers but they lack that divine spark which differentiales between the mere mechanical performer and the artist.

King in Terrible Rage

Latest reports from the Royal Palace are that that King Cook has been placed in a straight jacket to prevent him from doing serious injury to his royal person and to prevent further damage to the palace furniture. It is understood that he has been in confinement since the receipt of King Cockeye's letter which accounts for his hitherto inexplicable absence from the State Council last Wednesday. Matters of State have come to a standstill but there is no warrant for report that the coronation has been postponed. It will be held as first announced on Friday, March 27.

HELLWULF SON OF MUDGAR

back. Hownell you expect to kill dragon thout no armor, no spear, nor nuthin'? Washa matter theoo?"

"Shut up,' said Hellwulf, "You're drunk."

"Know it," said Gotheald. "Go head and risk damfool neck if you wanna. Got fire inshuansh, hey?"

The dragon smelled him and started for him. He whiffled and burbled as he came. He stopped dead when he saw the lean man. He looked at him for a moment, then heaved a sigh and came again, and as he heaved the sigh he opened his mouth. As he opened his mouth the young man unslung his fire extinguisher and shot a stream of acid down the monsters throat. The dragon, living on fire, died when the fire went out. The people on the walls let out a yell that rang from peak to peak and back to peak again.

So on the morrow did Hellwulf, son of Mudgar, marry Freytgar, daughter of Gotheald, the drunk, amidst much chering and beering. So did they live heppa heppa, heppa ever after.—From Cincinatti Bearcat.

SWEARING

Aside from any question of religious prohibition, the indiscriminate employment of profanity is in wretched taste, and if it does not indicate a lack of understanding, it at least does indicate an appalling thoughtlessness. It is also violation of the rules of ordinary refinement that is becoming prevalent, not merely among young men and boys but also young women and girls. Promiscuous swearing coarsens social intercourse and generally lowers the social viewpoint if it does nothing worse. And we know no place where a campaign against it can be commenced more properly than among pupils in an institution of learning.

Students Refute Claim That Bible Is Out Of Style

Fears which have been prevalent among educators, religious fanatics, parents, and grand parents, that the Bible is becoming unpopular as reading material among the younger generation have been proved to be unfounded by an enterprising reporter of The Michigan Daily. After carefully preparing a questionaire and computing averages with great exactness, he has reached the conclusion that 96 per cent of the students have read the Bible at one time or another.

Add to the strength of this argument the fact that out of this 96 per cent who have read the entire book, it may be said, that the youth of our universities are not on a decline in spiritual matters.

Little preference was indicated for either the New or the Old Testament, most of the students having read portions of both books. Church affiliations seemed to have no effect upon the amount of reading which they had done.

In spite of this indication of religion, it was found that 98 percent of those who have read the Bible think that it should be interpretated liberally, and with a "grain of salt."
